The committee on permanent organization reported Hon Warner Miller for permanent chairman, and the report was accepted to have that fee ing and conversed with each chair. Mr Miller at the chair, Mr Miller at the chair, Mr Miller at the convention in the interest of harmony and said the disasters that had overtaken the Republican party were cue to factional difficulties. The same union of good feeling that distinguished the convention, would carry the party to success. It is severely criticized the Democrati for their failure to reduce the revenue or earry out other profuses, for turning out other profuses, for turning out other profuses, for turning out office holders; showed that Democrats despised the civil service law, and the protective tariff had proved the main stay of labor He also condemned the pension vetoes the machine of the familiar safety type, was put through a series of most extraordinary tests, with results which greatly astonished and amused the onlookers.

Starting from the center of the town a man rode the machine over belt a miles or so of road to the sank of the river Brent, where dismounting he proceeded to blow into a couple of small bags thathed to the bandles. The initation occupied obout a minute and then the rider, haying thrown his bicycle into the water, dived after it, swam across and landed on the other side. He then rode over three or four miles of very rough and varied country, including plowed fields and swampy mendows, and having recrossed the river, regained Hanwell by some very rough lances. lifting his machine over closed gates. Not until one gets down to the principalities of the Balkan Peninsula docs any really noteworthy innovation occur. Here one finds the medium between Asiatic and European methods of making bread. The medium, however, is far from being a hap-py one; no more execrable bread is to be found the whole world round than is serv-And all the sensors woods and actores for producing the producing of the product with an addition of digusters, but the product with permanent stone clams, and can be amplied where cost than any other all in the Kagland were cost than any other all in the Kagland were cost than any other all in the Kagland were cost than any other all in the Kagland were cost than any other all in the Kagland were cost than any other all in the Kagland were cost than any other all in the Kagland were cost than any other all in the Kagland were cost than any other all in the plate; sand, moreover, epicers very largely into its composition from correlessness in handling and milling the wheat. In Sof.a, Adrianopld, Philipopolis and all the larger cities, the milch-brod of Germany may readily be obtained, but the pensantry of the vil ages, bulf bake these clammy lumps of cearse brown dough in the ashes of their hearth and chew the gritty substance with morsels of rancid the ashes of their hearth and chew the gritty substance with morsels of rancid cheese.

This style of bresid confronts the disgusted European traveler for the first two hundred miles' beyord the Bosphoros, until one gets-pretty will out of the Greek and Bulgarian settlehents in Western Anatolia, when another decided change is experienced. Here we come suddenly into the realm of the simon-pure unleavened variety of Asia. Bread is how called ekmek, and takes the form of flat cakes or sheets about two feet in diameter, and the thickness of ordinary blot log paper. The necessaries for the preparation of this ekmek are coarse wheat flour, water, mixing trough, rolling pin, a large; thin griddle, and a show, burning substince called tezek for a fre. Taking these simple in gredients outside the house, early in the morning, the Torkish or Arme tian femsle kindles the fire, mixes the dough, rolls; to dute the rousehold for the day. When fresh and warm this breat is tough and cloggy; a few days later it loses something of its clogginoss, but retains its poughness; and as it advances in age it becomes brittle and hard. It is as indestructible, healthful and useful an article of food as the hardtack issued to the Ancient Mariner and the Old Man of the Sea. Caravans going long distances into the interior, carry fit in sacks and use it as the staple (ood of the company. The proper, way to eat ekmek is to roll it up like a Serell of pager ard take and use it as the staple good of the con-pany. The proper way to eat cknek is to roll to plike a serell of pager at d take bites off the end. It is atten chiefly with bowls of yourt, or clabbered milk; the end of the seroll is dipped in the yair, and bitten off.

In Asia Minor, as in other countries, however, the luxurious requirements of city bred people demand some kind of improvement on the ways and methods of country bumpkins, camel drivers and goatherds. Therefore, in gratification of their epicurean tastes the lugginious oriental baker has conceived and prepared little hoops or rings of bread about the size of the rope quoits aboard an Atlantic steamer. These novel preparations are made of finer and whiter flour than the ekmek, and are rendered light and aristocratic by the addition of sour dough or other leavening substances.
